The Wellcome Photography Prize, now in its second year, encourages compelling images that start conversations about the health challenges facing people from all background across the world.

The images displayed include:

- Zora the Robot Care-Giver, by Dmitry Kostyukov: an intimate representation of the role robots could play in helping care for society’s aging population.
- Virus Hunters by David Chancellor: how researchers are identifying zoonotic diseases, such as the flu, before they become a pandemic threat.
- Shroud, by Simon Norfolk and Klaus Thymann: an innovative, but small-scale, temporary fix to protect the Rhône glacier from the devastating effects of climate change.
- Dismuss and His Malaria Ambulance, by Brent Stirton: an example of the remarkable efforts volunteer health care workers make to provide vital lifelines for communities in low- and middle-income countries.

The 2020 Prize, open to amateur and professional photographers who are telling these provocative visual stories, is now open for entries. For 2020, our theme is Mental Health, covering two of five prize categories. Entries close on 16 December 2019 – for more information or to enter please visit: wellcome.ac.uk/photoprize

Photographers can access the exhibition from Sunday 27 – Tuesday 29 October 2019 at the marquee in the Global Health Lounge at the World Health Summit, at Kosmos, Karl-Marx-Allee 131a, Berlin.
